

From: drostrander@att.net@inetgw
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 12/6/01 9:46pm
Subject: Dear Department of Justice:

Dear Department of Justice:

The present settlement arrangement shows off Microsoft's extensive manipulative ability afforded to them by their monopolistic wealth. It is difficult to believe that this arrangement was not influenced by Microsoft money. The stench of corruption surround this entire settlement agreement, and it definately erodes faith in the ability of our justice system to make impartial decisions. The ugly, corrupting influence of money appears to have replaced your soundness for decision-making.

POINT BLANK- Microsoft is guilty of Monopolistic practices that have hurt/ruined competing businesses, not by shrewd innovativeness, but by deceptive deployment of computer piracy practices. The general public is naive concerning these matters, but anyone with any substantial history/experience in the computer industry is aware of that trend, and the hands off policy adhered to by the justice department. The U.S. Justice system is emulating and reinforcing the backward business payoff methods used in corrupt systems, such as Mexico. ANYTHING for a buck, appears to be the new official slogan of the U.S. Justice department, because it is painfully obvious that there is no priority on what is right, moral, or what is the longterm good for the public.